Room design ideas for teenagers 2021

Many teenagers across the world want or even have a specific curtain or wallpaper or anything that they want in their dream room. And new trends come out nearly every month that a teenager wants in their room such as LED lights and little plants and a wall of memories. A wall of memories is where people put pictures of friends, family, or pictures of a certain memory that you have had, and you put the picture on a wall and that creates a memory wall. Teenagers across the world use a mood board and use their certain materials and ideas to put on their mood board and use that to design their room. In boys' rooms most teenagers want a computer or laptop for homework, or a video game and it is popular to have the computer or laptop or anything on a desk.

Euro 2020

The UEFA Euro is held every four years, so the fashion will change with it as well. To different football boots to shin pads it all changes. It also varies between what sport equipment is trending, and what is not.

This year there are 24 different teams in the euro this year this means that each country has an individual kit also with a design of color to represent their own country's national flag. This year Nike is being more sustainable by making their own jerseys out of one hundred percent recycled bottles to help the environment and the world we live in.

The main reason football equipment sells is that the supporters (fans) want to have the same football equipment as their idols. The most popular football boots in the Euro 2020 is the Nike phantom gt elite fg, (green) which costs £219.95. The football used in the games is called uniforia, and it is mainly white with an upper graphic, which combines black brush prints with striping in neon blue, yellow and pink.

Fashion is finally waking up to sustainability

Clothes are part of our everyday life but do you know what they are made out of? Then read on to find out more...

The worst material for the environment is polyester it is a non-biodegradable substance it can take anything up from 20 to 200 to be broken down in landfill. Polyester is made out of synthetic oils that pollutes the oxygen, which we need to survive.

Many people across the globe are trying to upcycle their own clothes, they are doing this by reusing them to make their own masterpieces or donating their own clothes to a local charity or a clothes bank.

The most popular fashion trend at the moment is loungewear (joggers and a t-shirt) both for men and woman, which is something to wear and show off. Many people try to express what type of human they are by what they choose to wear.

Sustainability in trainers

Nike are one of the most popular brands in the world, Nike have grown and grown since 1964 when they were first a thing.

This few years Nike are being more sustainable by reusing other plastics to make their own trainers in a more sustainable way.

19% of the polyester Nike uses is recycled. Also Nikes using 70% environmentally preferred rubber as well as of Eva foam another sustainable material.

Adidas have made the ultra-boost 21, which is based upon the new design that released earlier this year, features a Forged Prime knit upper made in part with Prime blue, a high-performance recycled yarn containing 50 per cent Parley Ocean Plastic (upcycled waste sourced from beaches by coastal communities). These men's shoes are made to be much lighter than your everyday trainers weighing 355 grams.

Some people worry about moving to secondary school because of many different reasons like detentions or new friends. But really it's nothing to panic about.

When you get to high school the amount of homework dramatically increases, this means you may have multiple pieces of homework every week.

Many schools have Homework Clubs so pupils don't have to stress about doing it all at home.

Most people go to a secondary school with at least one other friend but some people are the only one to come from their primary school.

If you meet someone who doesn't know anyone you should try and make friends with them because it may make them feel better and less nervous.

THE LIGHTHOUSE

A full moon lit up the dark, rugged cliff face, exposing the proud tall lighthouse that shone its light over all the bay, guiding cargo ships coming in from overseas. In the distance, the village of Lye sat snugly within the cliff, providing safety for the local people.

The village was lit up by small oil lanterns; even the alleyways were candle lit, shining brightly to show villagers their way. Jolly fishermen were cheering in the pub which stood out from the other crooked houses. Rampike trees stood leafless in the distance.

In the lighthouse a young man was writing the daily log. He suddenly looked up at a photo of his grandfather, who'd helped to stop a ship from crashing when the lighthouse broke. The grandfathers and grandmothers of the rest of the village are there in the photo too.

All of a sudden the bulb in the lighthouse blew and smoke billowed down the stairs. The room went black.

"Fire!" yelled the baker, who was running up the hill followed by the rest of the villagers. The keeper ran out to see what had happened.

"We don't have a fire brigade!" exclaimed the Barmaid. So it was concluded by the villagers that they would get water in buckets and throw it onto the lighthouse.

The afternoon was spent by the residents of the village cautiously passing heavy buckets of water from the sea to the fire, careful not to spill any as every drop was precious. The villagers were worn out but they kept on going otherwise no boat would be safe.

Finally, the raging inferno was put out with one last effort from everyone in the village. Hurriedly, the lighthouse keeper ran in to survey the wreck of cogs and gears strewn across the floor. "hoooooooooooooooooooooot!" a ship was coming in.

The keeper panicked and all of a sudden he saw the lamp his grandfather used. He had a plan.

Outside he clearly explained to the villagers how his grandfather saved the ship over 100 years ago and how they should do the same. So all the people in the village ran home to get their lanterns or torches to light the way for the ship.

Carefully, they all stood along the cliff shining light onto the water and not a moment too soon, the ship managed to steer out of the way just in time. They saved the cargo and the crew. Just then the sun rose over the hill.
